

CIVIL-SERVICE COMMISSIONERS.

The President's appointments to the civil-service commission leave nothing to be desired. If they may be said to cause any regret, it is that they were not made sooner, during the first months of the present administration, when the wholesome influence of a well-constituted civil-service commission was badly needed. Had the commissioners been appointed earlier they might have been able to keep the President from the blunder of deferring to May 1 the application of civil-service rules to the railway mail service, and have prevented the scandals resulting from the hundreds of removals of democrats from that service for avowedly "political" reasons. Mr. Hugh S. Thompson, the democratic appointee, was nominated by President Cleveland for the place for which President Harrison has now named him, but the Senate, in pursuance of its partisan policy of saving up patronage for Mr. Cleveland's successor, omitted to confirm him. His qualifications for the post of civil-service commissioner are unquestionable, and he has the supreme qualification of being a real friend of the civil-service law. While Assistant Secretary of the Treasury during the Cleveland administration he had abundant opportunities to give the law a practical test, and was well known as one of its most ardent advocates and defenders. Prior to his service in the treasury, which began in 1886, Mr. Thompson was twice Governor of South Carolina, in which State he was born fifty-two years ago. As he is a typical Southern democrat, of low tariff views, his appointment by President Harrison indicates that the alleged Southern policy of the latter is not to lead invariably to the selections of Randall democrats. As Mr. Thompson's appointment is a reappointment of Mr. Cleveland's nominee, it will be perceived also that the President is open to considerations of courtesy not usually recognized by the average politician.

Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, the other appointee to the civil-service commission, is likewise a thoroughly competent man and a prominent advocate of civil-service reform. What is a little remarkable about this appointment is the fact that, though a staunch republican, Mr. Roosevelt is something of a mungwump—a species of patriot of which the President is not supposed to be particularly fond. He has rendered conspicuous service in the New York Legislature, in which he served three years. A number of bills of importance presented by him attracted wide attention, and several of the most important became laws. In 1885 he was the republican candidate for mayor of New York, having Mr. Abram Hewitt and Mr. Henry George for competitors. His rank in his party may be said to be of the best, if character and actual merit are held to contribute to the standing of the modern New York politician. Altogether, these two of the President's appointments are so good as to give rise to a hope that they will be followed by others like them.

With a civil-service commission composed of Lyman, Thompson and Roosevelt, all friends of the Pendleton act, the President, if he is disposed to carry out the promise of his inaugural address—to extend the scope of the civil-service law—will have at his hand an apt instrument of reform. The public will be glad to see him use it to the best possible effect, with the result ultimately of abating the office-seeking nuisance, from which Washington has suffered so much of late.

Phonographic toys—birds that warble as in their native forests, cats that purr and spit, horses that neigh and dogs that bark—are among the latest applications of the wonderful sound-storing instrument. We may next expect to see the wax-figure men produce statues of President Harrison that work their lower jaws and recite passages from the inaugural address of March 4th, 1889, in the tones and with the very accents and inflections which he has talked in to the receiving cone; of Mrs. Cleveland with her pleasant words of greeting; of General Sherman, with one of his fatherly speeches to his old companions in arms; of Patti, with an aria from "Traviata." The gates into this world of possibilities are only just ajar, and are waiting for a showman with enterprise enough to push them

NORTH CAROLINA IN THE WAR.

North Carolina has not received from the pen of any historian, so far, anything like her just dues, and the commanding position she took, and the hard-fighting she did in the War between the States.

The following extract from the memorial address of ex-Gov. Scales, delivered at Raleigh last Saturday, is the truth itself and will be interesting reading for all:

"The following is the loss in killed of the Southern States:

North Carolina,	14,522
Virginia,	5,328
South Carolina,	9,187
Georgia,	5,653
Mississippi,	5,807

North Carolina did the most fighting, others did the most talking and made the most noise, and I fear also they made more history.

"It is a glorious record for North Carolina at Gettysburg, a glorious record for North Carolina during the war, and no amount of falsehood, slanders and injustice, from whomsoever it comes, can blot the record out. God forbid that I should attempt to do any injustice to the noble old Commonwealth of Virginia, our sister State, from the days of the revolution to the present time. She has been mentioned in history as the mother of Presidents, heroes, States and statesmen. I would not detract a laurel from her brow. There is glory enough carved out by bloody hands from all the States to give each one his full share. I have nothing to say except in terms of praise of the noble Pickett and his gallant division but I ask, and I want justice for North Carolina.

"I now propose to introduce personal testimony, most of whom are eye-witnesses and of such weight as to put the blush of shame upon the authors of the false charge. The witness is our great and fearless leader.

"Gen. Lee says in his report of the battle of Gettysburg, dated July 31, 1863, that the battle recommenced in the afternoon of the 31st of July and ended with great violence until sunset. Our troops succeeded in entering the advanced works of the enemy, getting possession of some of the batteries, but our artillery having nearly expended its ammunition, the attacking columns became exposed to the heavy fire of the numerous batteries near the summit of the ridge, and after a most determined and gallant struggle were compelled to fall back to their original position, and now as if to confirm what he had said, he continues that the conduct of the troops was all that he could desire or expect, and they deserved success so far as it could be deserved by heroic valor and fortitude. This is the calm and dispassionate truth, and will be accepted as such by Virginians and the balance of mankind. The conduct of the troops on the left and right, with no exceptions, was all that he could expect or desire."

Gov. Scales then quoted at considerable length the testimony of many other well known and reliable witnesses. A full history should be made of the war, and the conduct of the troops on the left and right, with no exceptions, was all that he could expect or desire."

THE ALMIGHTY DOLLAR.

The new U. S. treasurer began the performance of his duties last Monday and the quadrennial count of the money in the treasury will soon begin. The following extract from the Washington Star will give the reader a faint idea of the herculean task to be thus undertaken—thanks to the Republican "protectionists" who are responsible for this money being in the treasury vaults at Washington instead of in the pockets of the people all over this broad land. The Star says:

"The count of the money here will be a gigantic operation, lasting at least five months. When the office last changed hands but two months were consumed in the count, but since then the great silver vault under the north court has been built and filled with over eighty-six million silver dollars. This took six months to count and stow away, but it can be recounted in about half that time. There are about twenty-five millions of gold coin there.

"The teller's cash will be counted out to-morrow night in order to permit the transaction of current business on Monday, and the vaults will then be sealed until opened by the counters, who will consist of a committee of three—designated by the Secretary, and a force of 60 or 70 assistants. The working hours will be from 8 till 5 o'clock each day except Sunday."

Ex-President Cleveland exchanging the management of the affairs of a nation of sixty million people for the simple duties of a referee in a law suit between two fellow-citizens, and Minister Phelps returning from England to resume his lectures as a professor in the Yale law school, form companion pictures very interesting and significant to the believer in republican institutions. The idea of pensioning men who have held high office under the government has merit, but it is pleasant to note the fact that so few of our eminent public men are willing to retire to a life of idleness while they have health and strength to earn their own living.

STATE ELECTIONS THIS YEAR.

The only elections in North Carolina this year have already occurred—the municipal contests which many of our towns and cities have just passed through.

But in nine other States elections are held this year, and while, coming immediately after the storm and stress of the presidential election, they are not likely to create more than a languid public interest, yet locally some of them may be exciting from the issues involved. The States in which these elections occur are Iowa, Kentucky, Maryland, Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Virginia. In Iowa, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania the republican ascendancy is too great to lead to any likelihood of party change either in the governorship or in the political complexion of the Legislature. In Kentucky, Maryland, New Jersey and Virginia the democrats will probably retain their control, although there is said to be some disaffection in the party in New Jersey, and that a strong effort will be made, backed by the support of the federal government, to bring Virginia into the republican column. New York has always been a doubtful State. The majority of its voters are confessedly democratic, and but for the gerrymandering of its congressional and legislative districts it would probably elect a democratic Legislature and a much larger contingent of democratic Congressmen if the result was not affected by the dickering usually carried on between the leading politicians of both parties. The election in New Jersey, where it is conceded that Leon Abbott will be the democratic candidate for Governor, will be more warmly contested than usual because his success would pave the way at the expiration of his term of office to his subsequent election to a seat in the Senate of the United States, which is said to be "the goal of his ambition." In Ohio, which is to elect a Governor, all but two of the State officers, and a Senator of the United States, the principal contest will be over the Legislature, which is to elect a successor to Senator Payne. The chances in this respect are said to be favorable to the democrats, owing to the bitter quarrels existing among the republican politicians, but the latter, on great occasions, are generally in the habit of subordinating their individual dislikes to the interests of the party, and it would not be well to count upon their doing less in this instance, when there is a democratic Senator to turn out and a republican to be put in his place. On the whole, then, a survey of the field would seem to be that each party will hold its own at the coming elections, with the United States senatorship in Ohio in doubt.

Copier Tanner, who is now Commissioner of Pensions, has been declaring in Tennessee that the States of the South ought to provide pensions for the men who fought to destroy the Union. There is a constitutional provision against this. New York World.

And this from the self-constituted Know All! There is no such provision in the Constitution. The 14th Amendment merely provides that no State shall pay any debt contracted in aid of "rebellion," and North Carolina and other Southern States already provide for their old soldiers. The World should study the Constitution of the United States. We commend it to you as very interesting reading, brother.

At the banquet of the Southern Society in New York recently, the Governor of North Carolina and the Governor of South Carolina occupied adjoining seats, which fact provoked many jests, including a not from Governor Buckner: "My State," said he, "has probably furnished a greater number of gallons of pretext for an interchange of remarks between the Governor of North Carolina and the Governor of South Carolina than has any other State."

General Butler and Admiral Porter are calling each other a "coward," whereupon the Washington Post says: "When two old warriors, up to their waists in the grave, rake up the dirt and squabble to see which head shall get sand on it first, the country will conclude that the war didn't last quite long enough."

Polk, John Y. Mason, and hundreds of others from all Southern States, will be present at the great alumni reunion, dinner, and reception. The occasion will be most memorable in the history of the University, which has graduated one President and been honored by the visits of three Presidents.

SAM. JONES IN DANVILLE.

Rev. Sam P. Jones, daughter, and sister arrived in Danville Sunday morning. In the afternoon he preached to three thousand people at the tabernacle and his sermon was principally directed at church-members. He was very rough on whiskey drinking, and declared that in his opinion the official who signs a liquor license, the church-member who rents a house to be used as a saloon, the "bull-necked" bartender and the drunkard would all go to hell together. A large number of people from the neighboring towns and surrounding country were present to hear the great evangelist.

MRS. STONEWALL JACKSON'S FATHER DEAD.

Rev. Dr. R. H. Morrison, father of Mrs. Stonewall Jackson, died at the home of his son, in Lincoln county, N. C., at 7 o'clock Monday morning. His death was totally unexpected, but was due to an affection of the heart. Mr. Morrison was born in 1798, and attended the North Carolina University at Chapel Hill at the same session as did James K. Polk. He was the oldest Presbyterian minister in the State, having been in the ministry more than fifty years, and was for a long time pastor of the Charlotte Presbyterian church. He was the first president of Davidson College. He was ninety years old at his death.

DEATH OF DR. CHAS. PHILLIPS.

Rev. Charles Phillips, D. D., LL. D., professor of mathematics in the University of North Carolina for fifty years, and connected with the institution as student, tutor and professor, and well known throughout the South as a preacher, teacher, author, and an influential public man, died suddenly at Birmingham, Ala., Thursday, and was buried at Chapel Hill last Saturday. The University exercises were suspended and the faculty and students attended the funeral in a body. Professor Phillips was a son of Rev. James Phillips, D. D., of England, for forty years professor of mathematics in the University of North Carolina. The other surviving members of the family are Hon. S. F. Phillips, of Washington, D. C., ex-Solicitor-General of the United States, and Mrs. Cornelia Phillips Spencer, a well-known writer and author residing at Chapel Hill.

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla 100 Doses One Dollar

The Chief Reason for the great success of Hood's Sarsaparilla is found in the article itself. It is merit that wins, and the fact that Hood's Sarsaparilla actually accomplishes what is claimed for it, is what has given to this medicine a popularity and sale greater than that of any other purgative.
